

A Man to Cross Rivers With

"The Old Man's been dead a long time, nearly thirty years. Now I am old, nearly as old as the Old Man when I first met him. He died alone. Alone I now serve his legacy. If stories improve with age, he and I have seasoned his to near perfection..." Thus starts chapter one of A Man to Cross Rivers With, a historical novel based on Gunnison, Colorado Sheriff Doc Shores. Raised on a Michigan farm, Doc Shores moved west as soon as he was old enough. He became a frontiersman, gunman, and eventually one of the most noted and respected lawmen in Gunnison County. This fictionalized novel describes adventures on the frontier from Montana to Kansas and Texas and Doc Shore's move to Gunnison with his beloved wife.
